I should also point out the findings from the presser:

As of 6 am today, anger against OPS is down 10% from yesterday. I can also confirm that support for the convoy's goals has fallen from 53% on January 29th, to 43% yesterday to 25% today. So the presser yesterday was very effective. We will be monitoring to ensure it stays that way. You are trending in the right direction !

Subject: Alberta effect

Hi team.

We ran the scenario the Chief asked "What if we were to take further action and what happened in Alberta were to happen in Ottawa?"

Answer: Currently, under 10% of people in Ottawa are expressing deep concern about how the trucker convoy is being handled. Most of these people are downtown. If you were to take an Alberta-type action, you would get a 10% lift in opinion from centretown residents because they are happy you took action, but you would take a 50% hit from residents in other parts of the city who are currently not expressing any concern with the situation. If things went south like in Alberta, they would blame the Ottawa police for the misstep.

I have attached the table with the analysis.

Hello Erin, Lee and Natalia,

Just following up on John's message from this morning. Hoping you can confirm what information your team will be able to provide and timelines.

Thanks,

Jen Ghadiali

Erin and Lee,

Are there any sentiment indicators you can provide us related to public sentiment on:

The weekend demonstrations in general

The management of the protest in the core

Performance/response of Ottawa Police and policing partners

Any key issues/complaints related to the demonstration

Please advise if this is possible today and on Monday morning. Cam and Jen will be your contacts.

John
